

Drive or Be Driven. Or Both

Street Test Drives and indoor EV Test Track among popular features to return

San Diego, Cal., Dec. 16, 2025 – As auto show organizers enter their final stages of preparation for the 2026 edition, they know that one thing matters most: the experience.

“New vehicle test drives and indoor test rides are among the most popular features at auto shows across the United States,” said Scott Webb, president of the New Car Dealers Association San Diego County, which owns and operates the San Diego International Auto Show (SDIAS). “The experience really does matter and when a consumer can drive or ride in a new vehicle at an auto show, they’re getting the most engaging opportunity possible to learn about cars and trucks and ever-changing vehicle technology.”

For the 2026 edition of the SDIAS, which runs Jan. 1-4, show goers can drive a wide variety of vehicles outdoors on public streets, or be driven indoors as passengers at the 65,000 sq. ft. EV Test Track, Powered by Lenz Charging. Knowledgeable product specialists will accompany drivers and riders to provide useful details and vehicle information during the drive experience.

Ticket holders can expect a roster of vehicles that demonstrate power, luxury and efficiency. For the first time, EV-maker VinFast will be featured in a Street Drive, while Stellantis will include models from its entire brand portfolio, including PHEV and EVs. Toyota will also be on hand with a variety of its EVs and gas-powered vehicles. All Street Drives are at or near the front entrance to the convention center, while Cadillac and Ford electric vehicles will be featured indoors at the EV test track.
